SYMPTOMS OF INTERSTITIAL LUNG DISEASE

Interstitial Lung Disease Symptoms

Even though there are many types of ILD, many symptoms overlap among them. Most people experience some form of breathing difficulty, as well as symptoms such as:

- Shortness of breath
- Reduced exercise tolerance
- Coughing, typically nonproductive
- Weight loss
- Fatigue

The most common interstitial lung disease symptoms include shortness of breath (dyspnea), fatigue and cough. People often describe shortness of breath as a sense of breathlessness. Most often, this occurs progressively, not suddenly, and is noticed with strenuous activity or during exertion.

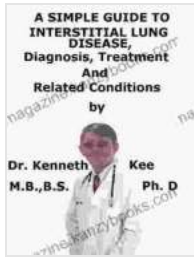

Interstitial lung diseases also typically causes a dry, sputum-free cough. Low energy or fatigue is quite common, and people with connective tissue or systemic autoimmune disease may also experience joint or muscle aches and rash, as well as other non-respiratory symptoms.

ILD affects everyone differently and the conditions progress at varying speeds. For some people, the scarring develops quickly. In others, though, it takes a little longer to develop. Symptoms vary from mild to severe as well and may not change for a while.
