Through in-depth research and real-world examples, Dr. Smith uncovers the root causes of this crisis and offers actionable solutions for restoring leadership to its rightful place.

Dr. Smith argues that the decline of leadership is a direct result of a number of factors, including:

- The rise of individualism and self-interest.
- The decline of institutions and community.
- The increasing complexity and interconnectedness of the world.

As a result of these factors, Dr. Smith argues that we are now facing a "crisis of leadership." This crisis is characterized by a lack of vision, a lack of courage, and a lack of accountability.

The consequences of the leadership crisis are far-reaching. It has led to a decline in trust, a decline in morale, and a decline in productivity.

Dr. Smith argues that we can overcome the leadership crisis by restoring leadership to its rightful place. This means creating a culture of leadership, developing new leaders, and empowering leaders to make a difference.

In this book, Dr. Smith offers a comprehensive roadmap for restoring leadership to its rightful place. He provides practical advice on how to:

- Create a culture of leadership.
- Develop new leaders.
- Empower leaders to make a difference.

If you are concerned about the decline of leadership in the 21st century, then this book is a must-read. Dr. Smith provides a clear and concise analysis of the problem, and he offers actionable solutions for restoring leadership to its rightful place.
